

Aug
14
2009

Food Truck of the Week: Baby's Badass Burgers

Baby's Badass Burgers
Photo: courtesy of the truck

Just as the Fro-yo Fad began to fade away, along came another (perhaps even more maniacal) culinary trend. Los Angeles is now a landscape covered with what can only be described as upscale roach coaches. It all began with the Korean-Mexican phenomenon called Kogi. And in less time than it takes a summer replacement on The CW to disappear, there were food trucks everywhere. In an effort to give this new wave of trucks a certain semblance of order, we'll be offering our Food Truck of the Week. Finding it on Zagat Buzz is easy. Finding it on the street...not so much.

Baby's Badass Burgers

They serve burgers with names like "Original Beauty," "Cougar," "Mamacita" and "Man Eater." If you want double meat on your bun, it's called a "Man Up." Not surprisingly, there's a chicken sandwich called a "Hot Chick." The hot dogs are "Teenie Weenies." Is the food any good? Does it really matter? That's because the outfits worn by the servers – the shortest of short-shorts, skimpy tank tops and high heels – make the dress code at Hooters seem downright nunlike. To find Baby's, go to www.babysbadassburgers.com or, of course, Facebook or Twitter.